Car Stolen with Toddler in Tow

In Beaverton, Oregon, a car thief stole a woman's car not knowing that a toddler was in the backseat. When he saw the child, he went back to the mother, reprimanded her, threatened to call the police on her, and then drove away in her car. "He hopped in the car, drove it, realized there was a 4-year-old inside, and drove back and told her to take the child out of the car and then drove away again," Henderson said. "We're thankful he had the decency to bring the little one back." The boy was unharmed, the police said.

This happened at a market in Beaverton, where the woman, Crystal Leary, left her car's engine running and her doors unlocked to buy some groceries. "As moms, we get really busy and we think we're just running in for a second and this is just a perfect example of just letting our guards down and how terrible it could have ended," Crystal Leary, the mother, told CNN affiliate KPTV. "I am thankful that he is okay. It was so stupid and I'll never do that again, but it's that split second decision that can just change everything," she said.

The car that was stolen, a 2013 silver Honda Pilot, was found a few hours later in Portland, eight miles away from Beaverton. The police are still searching for the one who took the car. Henderson said, "This is a good learning lesson for all of us who have children. Be extra careful with your kids, take the extra step to make sure they're safe."

Volcanos, Earthquakes, and Tsunamis

Volcanos, earthquakes, and tsunamis are all frightening and destructive natural disasters, but did you know that they're all connected? One of these disasters can cause another, leading to even BIGGER disasters. It's crazy but they all have scientific explanations that make a lot more sense.

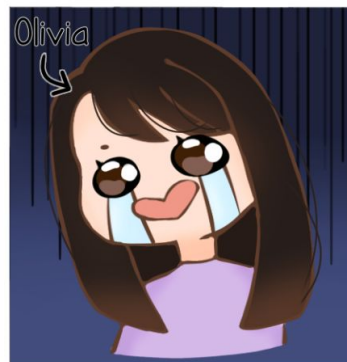

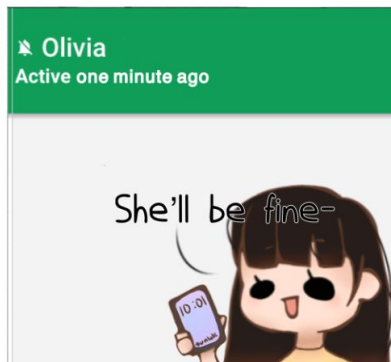

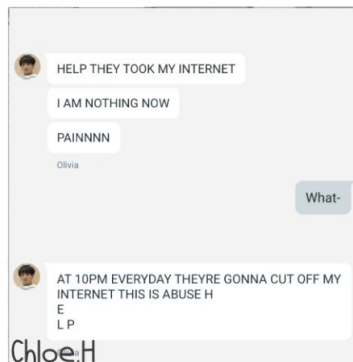

For instance, volcanoes can lead to earthquakes. Not all earthquakes are formed by volcanoes, but many are. Volcanoes normally happen in between tectonic plates, where the earth's crust is weaker and shifts a lot, causing magma from the mantle to exert pressure on the crust, cracking it and making a volcano. Similarly, earthquakes happen when tectonic plates bump and shift against each other, making the ground crack and move. Since volcanoes fracture the ground just like earthquakes, many volcanoes can cause earthquakes.

Just like how volcanoes can cause earthquakes, earthquakes can cause tsunamis. Big earthquakes on the marine floor can cause huge waves that strike land and become tsunamis. This process doesn't happen quite as often, and it's really destructive & dangerous, obviously. When you think about it, tsunamis are kind of like the aquamarine version of an earthquake.

Natural disasters are nothing to laugh at, and they can cause people to lose everything they own. These double disasters are even worse. If you want to help people that are stuck in these terrifying situations, you could donate to charities dedicated to helping disaster survivors.

Humble Holda Pt. 2

Facts About the Loch Ness Monster

Thanks For Reading
this Newsletter!

I tried getting the boy out, but my old brain forgot where I put the keys. I guess the girl thought if she helped me out, I would get the boy out, so every time I was in the kitchen, she would come and help mix something (I cleaned every mess she made). Later, she explained it as me forcing her to do work, but who would trust an aged grandma?

I felt bad for the boy, being the humble woman I am, so I thought and thought. It looked like the kids were a bit... poor looking at their clothes, so I decided to give them something made of gold. My retirement money could buy some accessories for them, so I wanted to make the boy a ring. After getting the measurements and getting the ring made, I finished it. The ring looked a bit big, so I asked the boy to stick out his finger. When he did, I felt it, and was shocked. I thought I had fed him enough! I murmured, "Eat more, boy, you need to become more plump". I guess they freaked out and thought I was going to eat them....

I later made some cake, but afterwards, I had to clean the oven. I got some water in a bowl, and my scrub, but I had to go inside, and my back ached. I asked the young girl to help me. That's all I asked for. Then you know what happened. She pushed me into the oven, and I still have burns for that! Good thing I had some water.... When I finally put the oven out, and as I kicked and kicked the door, I heard my bird cage open, and the girl saying, "Good thing we got out in time". After 5 more kicks, the door had opened. I climbed out and saw the kids gone. Apparently the girl had found the key. I looked around, but all my belongings were gone, too! They took everything. My retirement money, my sweets, my gold. The only thing left behind were my birds and that one ring I had made for the boy. Those little brats took everything when I gave them food, shelter, and almost everything they needed.

- Nickname is Nessie
- Lives in the Loch Ness lake in Scotland
- Scientists think the monster is a myth
- The first written account is in a biography of St. Columba from ad 565
- A hunter, Marmaduke Wetherell, found large footprints along the lake's shores which he thought belonged to a huge long animal, but then found out that someone faked the tracks using a stuffed hippopotamus foot

Disclaimer: We don't believe in Nessie.
