

Severe Rain in Nashville

Severe rains slammed into Nashville, Tennessee overnight, pushing creeks and rivers past their banks and leaving 4 people dead Sunday morning.

The storm that hit Tennessee brought the most rainfall for a single day during March in Nashville history. About 130 people needed to be rescued from cars, apartments, and houses, authorities said.

The police recovered a body of 70 year-old Garry Cole from a vehicle near Sevenmile Creek. The Metro police reported another flood death on the Nashboro Village golf course Sunday morning. They found Douglas Hammond, 65, who lived nearby. By mid-morning, two additional people had died, a 64 year-old man, Frederick Richards and a 46 year-old woman. Both were found near a homeless camp in a wooded area near Wentworth-Caldwell Park. The woman has not yet been identified by the police.

Meanwhile, rescue groups across the Nashville region have been busy all night, rescuing people from trapped cars and homes.

Office of the Emergency Management Chief William Swann said crews continued Sunday to go through all homeless encampments and creek beds to make sure everyone is accounted for.

HYBE and Ithaca Deal

The Southern Korean entertainment company HYBE, previously known as Big Hit Entertainment is linking up with Ithaca Holdings.

This international deal was announced Friday morning. In this deal, HYBE, through their wholly owned subsidiary HYBE America, acquired 100 percent interest in Ithaca Holdings and it's properties, including SB Projects and Big Machine Label Group. As part of the deal, Scooter Braun, chairman of Ithaca Holdings, will join the HYBE board and Scott Borchetta, CEO and founder of the Big Machine Label Group will continue as CEO of Big Machine. According to Reuters, this deal is worth approximately $1.05 billion.

The HYBE x Ithaca deal brings together management, label services, and publishing for a number of high-profile artists. Among them are BTS, Justin Bieber, Ariana Grande, SEVENTEEN, Demi Lovato, ZICO, TXT, and more.

A President’s First 100 Days

Looking back, a president’s first hundred days in office actually do matter. It all started with President Franklin D. Roosevelt. When he rose to office in 1933, he immediately started making his mark. In the first hundred days alone, he had passed 76 bills, signed laws that gave government relief to farmers and unemployed people, and faced the economic conundrums head-on. The 100 day mark in a president’s time is considered the time when a president’s leadership and power are starting to change the world around them. After Franklin D. Roosevelt’s big debut, the first hundred days of a president’s term became a big deal, but our newer president’s are starting to not live up to Roosevelt’s high standards.

Let’s take a look at a graph that shows the amount of laws passed by our presidents during their first hundred days. As you can see, the graph shows that the amount of laws passed by our president’s decreases over time. But why? To put it simply, more laws are passed during times of crisis. FDR (Franklin D. Roosevelt) was president during the Great Depression, so during that time, many MANY laws would have had to be passed. Also, when one party controls most of the Congress and the president, it has a big impact on the amount of laws passed in the first hundred days, because it makes it a lot quicker to pass a law. Because of our currently equally divided Congress, laws take a lot longer to pass. But that’s not a bad thing. It’s important to have equal representation so fair and just laws are the only laws that exist. Just because a president passed more laws in their first hundred days, it doesn’t make them a good president. It just makes them accomplished.

Joe Biden’s first hundred days aren’t over, but of course, changes are being made. Who knows what president’s will accomplish in the future?

Story Pt. 4

Chapter 1: Sarah the Gossip Queen AKA My Loveable Bestie

She shouted, “LOOK AT THIS!!!!”, and shoved her phone in my face. I layed up to get a better view of me in a bathing suit, with a weird dance pose. I groaned, for that was one of my top 10 embarrassing photos for me, and me only (and maybe Sarah too). “You know, you really should start introducing me as, “Sarah the Gossip Queen, AKA My Loveable Bestie” Tiffany!”, Sarah squealed, studying her fingernails. That moment, my sister barged into my room, saying in an annoyed voice, “Oh my gosh, Tiffany, you need to stop sending me videos of you SINGING! It’s like, so annoying, and like, your voice sounds like a dying CHICKEN! Heck, I bet it sounds better than you! And stop with the memes..... My friends like, probably think that you are like, insanel!”. “I’ll give you 5 for the videos”, Sarah said, fishing out a 5 dollar bill out of her purse and slapping it in my sister’s hand.
